

A Job to Love

“I was tired of corporate America. I wanted a job where I could make a difference. I called and visited Renaissance, and they called back with new opportunities. I am happier now than I have ever been.”

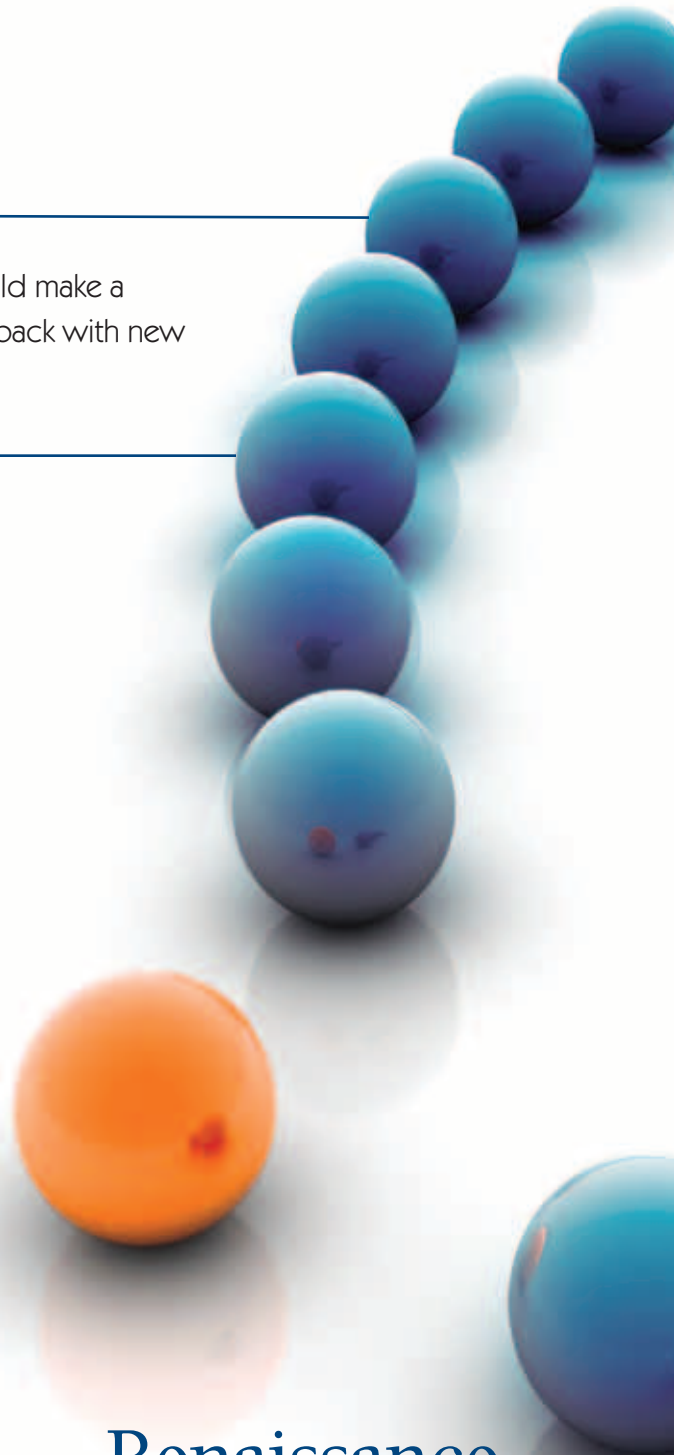

Elizabeth’s world was shaken. Changes were coming at her fast after the death of her husband. Life circumstances required she re-enter the workforce as a full-time employee, but she found herself locked in a cycle of temporary contract positions. At the crest of a 30-year career as an executive assistant to top level executives, Elizabeth had proven skills and a positive attitude and yet she found herself struggling to find a good job.

A colleague recommended Elizabeth call Renaissance Personnel Group. She explained Renaissance had placed her daughter in an exciting job that was blossoming into a fulfilling career. And Renaissance had done the same for several of the family’s friends.

Elizabeth met with Renaissance and her world changed for the better. “My life was so unsettling back then. Just being in Renaissance’s beautiful, comfortable, environment helped me, and the people treated me with care and respect. They took time to really get to know me and, from what I experienced, they know their clients well. They know exactly what is expected by the employer.”

Within two weeks of her first phone call to Renaissance, Elizabeth landed a job as the Executive Assistant in a Phoenix non-profit organization where she continues to make a recognizable difference in the workplace and the world.

Elizabeth loves to tell the story of her first day of work. “Welcome to our organization. Today is the first day of the rest of your life,” her new boss said. Elizabeth refers her friends and colleagues to Renaissance. She says Renaissance made it possible for her to uncover the job of her dreams.

Change for the better.
renaissancepersonnel.com